A sefer Torah in memory of the late Dr. Oskar Rabinowicz was presented to the Jerusalem Great Synagogue during the Sabbath morning service yesterday by Mrs. Rose Rabinowicz and family. On the occasion, short addresses were delivered by Dr. Maurice Jaffe, chairman of the synagogue, and Prof. Theodore Rabb of the U.S., son of the late Dr. Oskar Rabinowicz.

On December 25 at 4 p.m., in room 612 of the University of Haifa's main building, Dr. Samuel L. Lefrak of New York will address the student body of the university on the subject Youth and the Challenge of the Future. Dr. Lefrak, who heads the Lefrak organization (one of the largest building concerns in the world) and the Lefrak Oil and Gas Organization (LOGO), will also be the recipient of the first University of Haifa's President's Award for Humanitarian Service in recognition of his endeavours in improving the world's quality of life.

Court stays yeshiva demolition order

The Jerusalem District Court on Friday ordered the municipality to desist from carrying out a demolition order against the Birkat Avraham yeshiva in the Old City until the yeshiva's appeal could be adjudicated.

The magistrate's court had earlier approved the city's plan to tear down an illegal addition to the yeshiva building.

The district court decision delayed the demolition for an indefinite time, but recommended that the appeal be weighed quickly. (Itim)

New method for measuring nasal blockages

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — A simple and inexpensive method of measuring blockages of the nasal passages has been developed by doctors at the Rothschild Hospital here in conjunction with the Haifa Technion's Faculty of Medicine, the Technion has reported.

The "nasal breath" method is based on a centuries old system of having the patient breathe onto a piece of polished metal or a mirror. The method uses a polished chrome-plated piece of metal on which arcs, one centimetre apart, have been inscribed, said Professor Ludwig Podoshin, director of the hospital's Ear, Nose and Throat Department.

Doctors are able to measure the vapour condensed on the plate. This, in turn, enables them to diagnose the presence of obstructions in patients' nasal passages.

The researchers, including Prof. Podoshin, Dr. Rachel Gertner and Dr. Milo Fradis, examined a group of 200 healthy patients in order to

U.S. military chiefs study Beirut truck bomb report

WASHINGTON (AP). — The U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff met on Thursday to review a special Pentagon commission report on the truck bombing that killed 341 U.S. servicemen on October 23 in Beirut and consider what, if any, disciplinary action should be taken against senior officers considered responsible for the security of the marines. The New York Times said in Friday editions.

"The commission concludes that little consideration was given by any military officers in Washington, Europe or Beirut to the issue of how terrorism might threaten a conventional military force," the newspaper quoted one administration official as saying.

Earlier in the week, a House of Representatives Armed Services Subcommittee issued its own report on the incident in which it accused Col. Thomas Geraghty, then commander of the 1,800 marines deployed ashore and afloat in the Beirut area, of "serious errors in judgment in failing to provide better protection for his troops within the command authority available to him."

The House report also said that Capt. M.M. France, the navy amphibious task force commander, "shares responsibility for the inadequate security posture of the marine force ashore." The congressional group further criticized what it called "higher elements of the chain of command" for failing to exercise sufficient oversight.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan on Friday said that he shares the blame for the deaths of the 241 U.S. servicemen in the explosion.

"There is no way to discount responsibility," Reagan said in an interview, but he said that he had not read the commission report.

Referring to his plan that sent the marines to Lebanon as part of a four-nation peacekeeping force, the president said: "There would have been no mission without my decision to go forward with it."

On Thursday, Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger acknowledged that the ultimate responsibility for what happened at the Beirut international airport rests with him as head of the military establishment.

West Bank talks needed, Mayor Freij tells Arens

BETHLEHEM (Reuters). — The mayor of Bethlehem told Defence Minister Moshe Arens at a Christmas Eve reception here last night that Palestinians, Jordanians and Israelis should negotiate a settlement for the administered territories.

Mayor Elias Freij said the Palestinians had lived on the West Bank for generations and deserved their own identity.

Arens responded by telling local dignitaries at the reception that he and Freij do not always agree on politics.

"I am sure you will not be surprised if I tell you that when (Freij and I) talk politics, there are some things we agree on and there are many things that we don't agree on," he said.

Arens added that any disagreements have to be solved by "discussion, goodwill and trying to understand one another."

It was the first time in the 16 years of Israeli administration that the Bethlehem Christmas reception was attended by an Israeli Defence Minister. Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek was also present.

Arens said he hoped his presence was an omen of improvement in relations between Christians, Moslems and Jews.

"This is the season of good will, and we should commit ourselves to peace," he said.

Peres says new gov't will soon be seen as only way out

Jerusalem Post Staff

Labour Party chairman Shimon Peres said last night that it could take another "month or two" for people to "be convinced that a change in government is the only way out" of the country's present situation.

Asked in an interview on the TV newsreel Mabat whether his meetings last week with former defence minister Ezer Weizman and Energy Minister Yitzhak Moda'i signalled a move towards pushing for early elections, Peres replied that a good chance now exists of setting up a "different government" under the Alignment.

"There is really no other way out of the situation the Likud has gotten itself into after 6½ years in power. Forming a national unity government is impossible because we can not come to any sort of agreement on the major issues," he said.

"I'm sorry to say that we haven't yet hit bottom economically, and it will take some time, maybe a month or two, before people are convinced that there's simply no other option than a change of government," Peres said.

Two killed in car-motorcycle collision

Two persons were killed yesterday afternoon in Rehovot when the car in which they were riding collided head-on with a motorcycle at the entrance to Tel Nof. The motorcycle driver was severely injured. The names of the dead and injured have not yet been released.

In Holon, a pedestrian hit by a car last night at the corner of Basel and Sokolov streets, was being treated in the intensive care ward at Wolfson Hospital. The 36-year-old driver of the car reported to a police station later, saying that he had not realized he hit anyone until someone who had been at the scene of the mishap told him.

Meanwhile, police announced that eight persons were killed and 87 were severely injured in serious accidents last week throughout the country. Among the fatalities were five pedestrians, four of them children. (Itim)

Israel rail workers strike in North

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — The 1,000 Israel Railway employees in the North are going on a three-day strike starting this morning in the guise of an organized vacation. They are demanding a 30 per cent pay increase as compensation for erosion of their salaries.

The passenger service, which normally carries 10,000 people a day, will be suspended except for the single train from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv and back. Hardest hit will be Israel Defence Forces personnel returning to their units.

Freight service in the North will also be hit, although trains in the central and southern parts of the country will be running normally.

The railway employees declared a labour dispute two weeks ago after the breakdown of talks on their claim. The Histadrut asked the workers to defer their action pending further negotiations, but without success.

Israel Railway's spokesman said last night it will do its best to resolve the dispute in the shortest possible time.

Disputed grave vandalized in Rishon

RISHON LEZION (Itim). — Unknown persons between Thursday and Friday uprooted the tombstone set up on Thursday at the grave of Teresa Engelovitz in Rishon Lezion cemetery. Adina Harpaz, Engelovitz's daughter, said a new tombstone would be placed on the grave.

A new stone has already been a made by artists who identify with the family's struggle against extreme religious elements who seek to have Engelovitz's body removed from the cemetery on the grounds that she was not Jewish, said Harpaz.

The tombstone was erected in spite of opposition from the local Hava Kadisha and in the face of a prohibition order from the Rishon Lezion rabbinate.

Ten swans sighted on Lake Kinneret

TIBERIAS. — Ten swans have been seen on Lake Kinneret near Moshav Kinneret. This is the first time for many years that such a large number of the birds have been seen in Israel.

Dr. Uzi Paz, zoologist with the Nature Protection Society, said that their appearance here may be due to a population explosion of swans in Europe.

Israeli sees self in Bergen-Belsen film

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A 40-year-old Jerusalem civil servant claims to have recognized herself as an infant in the newly discovered Alfred Hitchcock film on Bergen-Belsen.

The film, which had lain for almost four decades in the archives of the Imperial War Museum in London, was made by Hitchcock while the camp was being taken over by the British Army early in 1945. It shows some of the worst horrors from the death camps ever seen on screen, as well as shots of recently arrived inmates there. The latter included a number of infants.

A short section of the film was shown by Israel TV on Wednesday night, and one viewer, Claire Klein, who immigrated from Toulouse, France, some two years ago, later telephoned TV to say she had recognized herself among the tots.

In an interview relayed on Thursday night, Klein showed a photograph of herself with her family a short while before she was removed to Bergen-Belsen at about 18 months of age.

Israel Prize for Avidar-Tschernovitz

Jerusalem Post Staff

This year's winner of the Israel Prize for literature is Yemima Avidar-Tschernovitz, a spokeswoman for the Ministry of Education and Culture announced.

A committee of academicians and writers recommended that Avidar-Tschernovitz be given the prize in recognition of her books for children.

Avidar-Tschernovitz was born in Vilna and came to the country with her family when she was 12 years old. After completing her studies here and in Europe, she worked for many years as a kindergarten director for the city of Tel Aviv.

She is the author of more than 40 books for children, many of them translated into various languages.

Avidar-Tschernovitz is married to Yosef Avidar, soldier and diplomat.

The couple live in Jerusalem. She is to receive her prize at a ceremony next Independence Day.

IS400m. damage in factory fire in North

RAMAT YISHAI (Itim). — Damage estimated at more than IS400 million was caused by a fire in a poultry-packing plant here near Afula on Friday night. Warehouses and freezers of the Of Ha'emek plant were severely damaged, according to firefighters called from Afula.

It took firefighters many hours to bring the blaze under control. Large police forces closed off the area. Many youthful volunteers helped contain the flames, before they reached tanks containing flammable ammonia.

Work at the factory, which employs some 300, is to resume this morning as usual.

An investigation is to be carried out to determine if the fire was a result of arson.

Woman, 65, burnt to death in Jerusalem

A 65-year-old woman was found burnt to death in her Jerusalem flat on Thursday night.

The woman, Fortuna Levy, was discovered sprawled out on her bed in her Ramat Eshkol flat, and a Magen David doctor called to the scene pronounced her dead.

The deceased's body was scorched, and the walls of her flat were blackened. Neighbours said they had heard no unusual noises and could not account for the fire.

A container of petrol was found in the flat.

Police and firemen examined the flat on Friday morning to try to determine whether it was a case of murder, suicide or accident.

The body has been turned over for a post mortem examination. (Itim)

Refusednik begins indefinite fast

MOSCOW (Reuters). — A Soviet Jewish woman who has been refused permission to emigrate to Israel on Friday announced she had started an indefinite hunger strike.

Jewish dissident sources in Moscow said Nadya Fradkova, 30, sent a message from her home in Leningrad saying she was prepared to starve herself to death rather than wait any longer for permission to leave.

Fradkova staged an indefinite hunger strike earlier this year when ended when police battered down her front door and took her to hospital for force feeding.

The sources said she now barricaded herself in her flat and the note out of the window to the below to announce her protest.

She said the police are calling almost every day and trying to force her to leave her flat, and that fears they plan to have her interned.

Safad committee formed to aid Ethiopian Jews

Jerusalem Post Reporter

SAFAD. — A group of local residents, mostly religious and new immigrants, have formed a committee to help Ethiopian Jews who are due to settle here soon.

Committee members want to help the newcomers settle in as quickly as possible. They have asked Safad

Chief Rabbi Simha Kaplan to announce that the Ethiopian Jews, as Jewish as others.

The committee said it was disturbed by statements from some ultra-Orthodox elements that they would fight against the settlement of Ethiopian Jews. These statements damaged Safad's good name, committee said.

Fania Fenelon, Auschwitz prisoner, 75

Fania Fenelon, 75, one of the members of the Auschwitz orchestra, died in Paris last week.

Fenelon, daughter of a Jewish father and a Catholic mother, was a young and gifted pianist who won first prize at the Paris Conservatoire shortly before the Nazis occupied France in 1940.

Under the German occupation, Fenelon performed in nightclubs to supply information about Nazi patrons to the French resistance. She was betrayed by a double agent in July, 1943, and deported to Auschwitz-Birkenau.

Fenelon volunteered as a singer, and became one of the members of an Auschwitz orchestra which comprised 10 violins, a flute, reed pipes, two accordions, three guitars, two mandolins, percussion and cymbals. Nazi S.S. officers included Rudolph Hess, camp commandant, Dr. Josef Mengele and General Heinrich Himmler, among those in whose honour concerts were performed. Many were also played for those who were out or returned hungry and exhausted from slavery outside of camp gates.

A book The Mustelians by Fenelon was published in London in 1978.

In 1980, the American CBS network made a three-part series based on Fenelon's Auschwitz experiences. But Fenelon deplored the fact that Venerable Redgrave, a PLO supporter, portrayed her in the leading role. (A2)

ATLANTA, Georgia (Reuters). — A Jew lynched by a mob in 1915 after being convicted of strangling a 13-year-old girl has been denied a posthumous pardon by Georgia's Board of Pardons and Poles.

The case of Leo Frank was the moving force behind formation of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith because of the anti-Semitic passions it aroused.

Frank was convicted and sentenced to death for strangling Mary Phagan, a sharecropper's daughter who died after she went to an Atlanta pencil factory, where he was a superintendent, to collect her

Postal Bank's free services need promoting

The Postal Bank lacks the "glamour" of the big commercial banks — with their clever advertising jingles, professionally designed brochures and mascots on the wall. But at a time of recession, when the average family is struggling to stretch its income towards the end of the month, the savings offered in free services by the Postal Bank are more attractive than the big banks' plush swivel chairs and soft background music.

This is the second and last of two articles on the Postal Bank.

The Postal Bank, with its optical scanning equipment, processes bills immediately and transfers money collected over the counter the same day or at most within two days. Thus the Treasury gains when the public pays what it owes through the Postal Bank.

The State Comptroller has recommended that an agreement be signed with the banks regarding bank transfers of public payments to the authorities a decade ago should be re-examined so that the government may receive more of the money owed to it. He also urged that collections by the Postal Bank — currently 54 per cent of all collections — be expanded.

The only charge imposed by the Postal Bank is IS35 for return of a cheque due to no cover, in comparison with the higher charges for a number of services at the commercial banks and possibly even higher charges in the near future.

TV VIEWERS will recall the series of public service advertisements calling on the public to make standing orders for the payment of telephone, water and electricity bills. A husband is doused by his wife with cold water for forgetting to pay the water bill; a family fails to hear from its soldier son because it didn't pay the phone bill; all appliances go dead because no one paid the electricity bill.

Many people thought that the ads were made and paid for by the Electric Corporation, the Ministry of Communications and in the case of water, the local authority. In fact, the series was commissioned by the Banks Association.

The Broadcasting Authority committee on public service ads decided to let the series go on the screen despite it being sponsored by an association representing profit-making companies, on condition that it was approved as a public service by Banks Examiner Galia Muor. She gave her okay.

Indoctrinating the public to pay by standing order is helpful to the authorities, because it means that fewer bills go unpaid and fewer telephones and water and electricity supplies have to be cut off.

But, are the ads really a public service? If the public had been informed that it could save money on bank charges by paying through the Postal Bank, would these ads for standing orders to the commercial banks have had much credibility?

UZI RAVEH, director of the Postal Bank, notes that his bank has produced a profit, after paying wages, interest, and the like, for several years. In the 1982/83 fiscal year, it made a total of IS565.3 million, which was transferred to the Finance Ministry's closed account, and can be used to cover any Postal Bank losses in the future.

How can the Postal Bank make a profit without charging the public high fees and commissions, while the commercial banks are crying about losses?

The answer is that the Postal Bank's employees (250 in the Jerusalem headquarters, plus the staffs in post offices) receive civil servants' salaries and benefits, and not the generous salaries and conditions that have been handed out munificently in recent years by commercial banks to their growing army of employees.

There are no fancy marble floors, plush seats or imported tapestries in Postal Bank offices. The director of the Postal Bank does not, unlike some of his counterparts, receive his salary a year in advance.

One would think that many Postal Bank workers would have been tempted to "desert" for much better-paying jobs at commercial banks. But this is rare, according to a senior employee who says: "We feel a strong identification with the Postal Bank and its work for the public good."

In order to save paying their employees "split-shift" pay, the commercial banks this week were reported to have considered keeping the banks open only from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m., thus forcing workers to leave their jobs during working hours to do their banking business.

Postal Banks are open the same long hours as the post offices in which they are housed and there is no thought of cutting down hours. Raveh says he is even looking into the economic feasibility of installing automatic banking machines in post offices for deposits and withdrawals. Another advantage of the Postal Banks is that they exist in the smallest and most peripheral communities — even in places that have no commercial bank.

So, with all these advantages, why doesn't the public know about it?

The Knesset and the State Comptroller would do well to study the influences of the commercial banking world on the government's financial establishment. Quite a few senior government officials have crossed the fence into the commercial banks, the most notable being former accountant-general Giora Gazit, who is today chairman of the board of Bank Hapoalim. There are many others who left lower levels.

There seems to be no good reason for the Communications Ministry not to go full speed ahead in an aggressive campaign encouraging the public to make use of the Postal Bank's free services, about which it has until now been so reticent.

Egypt proposes big project to leading U.S. contractor

Jerusalem Post Staff

The Egyptian government last week put forth proposals to major U.S. contractor Samuel Lefrak to build a "Lefrak City" in Cairo and Alexandria to ease Egypt's growing housing shortage.

Lefrak City in the Queens borough of New York City is considered a model of contemporary high-density urban residential construction.

Lefrak, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Jerusalem from Egypt on Friday for a week-long visit as the guest of the Israel Bonds Organization.

During his stay in Egypt, where he was accompanied by Donald Kummarsfeld, president of News America publishing company, Lefrak talked with officials about building residential units and also an addition to the Cairo National Museum. He attended a dinner hosted by Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Dr. Butros Ghali.

Cities such as Cairo and Alexandria are facing a severe housing shortage as the result of migration of rural population to crowded urban areas, Lefrak said.

"The sociological and economic future of the Middle East depends on meshing the economies of Israel and Egypt to constitute a counterweight to the present disturbed atmosphere," he declared. "Egypt's current infrastructure hinders for an exchange with a complementary economy like Israel's, boasting a high technology capacity," Lefrak said.

Capital's workers called to protest rally

The Jerusalem Labour Council's emergency task force has called on all workers in the city to gather at the council's headquarters on Rehov Straus at 1 p.m. tomorrow to protest against high prices, the growing wave of firings and the erosion in workers' pay.

After the rally, ends, the workers will march down Rehov Straus to Jaffa Road, and then up King George to the Hamashbir Lazarehan store.

In other labour council news, the Histadrut has given the green light for acquisition of a building plot in East Jerusalem, for erection of a labour council building to serve the capital's 15,000 Arab members of the labour federation. Construction will begin as soon as a suitable site is found.

'Israel being priced out of tour market'

By HYAM CORNEY
Jerusalem Post Correspondent
LONDON. — A "desperate" plea has been sent by Aharon Dishon, Israel government tourism director in London, to Minister Avraham Shafir, and to the Israeli tourist trade in general.

The plea, for a bigger budget for advertising and for hotel and air prices to be reduced, has been prompted by the slump in British tourist traffic to Israel in recent weeks and the prospects for 1984.

Dishon said in an interview that while tourism during the current Christmas period is "reasonable," November was "very gloomy" and the outlook for next year is equally grim.

The main factor is that Israel is being "priced out" by its Mediterranean competitors. Research carried out by Dishon showed that a three-star one-week holiday in a hotel with half-board in Spain, for example, is 60 per cent cheaper than a comparable vacation in Israel.

One of the factors is the weak position of the pound against the dollar on which all Israeli vacation prices are based. Because the pound is continuing to slide, many tour operators here are even losing money when they sell a holiday in Israel.

Another factor is the general fall in the British holiday market in general. This has affected even the biggest tour operators, who have had to reprint millions of summer holiday brochures with reduced prices.

The number of British tourists to Israel this year will reach 130,000 by the end of the month, putting Britain in second place behind France but ahead of West Germany in the number of visitors from European countries. The plea from Dishon therefore should carry some weight.

Dishon said he has been inundated with inquiries from tour operators large and small who are complaining about high prices. He fears that unless something is done — and done quickly — some of them will pull out of the Israeli holiday market altogether.

Banker says deposit interest must rise

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Banks will have to bring interest on deposits up to (or almost up to) realistic levels to avoid development of a "grey market" in loans outside the banks, Tzadik Bino, general manager of the First International Bank of Israel, said yesterday.

But the interest charged on overdrafts is now between 12 and 14 per cent a month which is less than the consumer price index rise during the past few months, and it must therefore be raised, he said on Kol Yisrael.

The Knesset Finance Committee apparently does not understand the necessity, with today's inflation, for the banks to collect interest monthly instead of quarterly, Bino said.

"We pay interest weekly, biweekly and sometimes monthly. Imagine a situation where we would collect interest quarterly and pay our depositors annually at today's rate of inflation." He said he hopes the committee will study the issue, and reconsider its decision.

In the past he said, banks were able to give many services as a package without charging for all of them because of the large sums of money people kept in their accounts. But now that this has changed, some services will have to be eliminated, others which were free will have to carry a charge and fees for still others will have to be brought up to real levels.

Firing workers or closing branches is not necessarily the solution, Bino said. If the banks tried to sell much of their property at once, they would precipitate a real estate crisis. Firing temporary workers may eliminate precisely those workers who add to efficiency. Firing a branch manager or department head is difficult, costly and does not always show savings immediately, he said.

He believes that bank share prices on the Stock Exchange will have to go up. The current 20 per cent dollar yield on the shares covered by the bank shares agreement leaves industry unable to compete for investments, he said, so that the bank share yield will have to be brought down to 12 or 13 per cent.

TV journalists protest by shortening newscast

Suspect reportedly held in Katz murder

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Police last night refused to confirm or deny reports that they are holding a prime suspect in connection with the murder of Danny schoolboy Danny Katz.

The reports carried in two newspapers said the suspect, a resident of Galilee, was one of several people who had been detained.

A story in Yedioth Aharonot said the suspect was a known sex offender and was also a member of a radical organization hostile to the state.

The Acre Magistrate's Court has prohibited publication of the identity of the suspects and even the number of those arrested.

Northern District police spokesman Rav Pakad Danny Kufler said last night: "The news blackout is still in force, and I cannot confirm or deny the reports which have appeared. In due time, we will give a full report to the press, but only when we are certain that we have solved the case."

The Jerusalem Post learned that two detectives from the national police headquarters have been seconded to the special squad investigating the death of 15-year-old Katz.

The team is sifting through a mass of information, including scores of statements from witnesses. It has also received the results of forensic tests and is trying to match these up with other clues gathered during the course of the investigation.

It is understood that the detectives have been working on the theory that Katz's brutal murder was carried out by a sex deviate, but they have not ruled out the possibility that there may be a terrorist connection.

Detectives are checking through hundreds of police records of known sex offenders and members of radical organizations.

There was reportedly a mood of optimism among the inquiry team members, indicating that an announcement that the case has been solved may be made soon.

Police stymied in Orly Dubi murder probe

BY MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Police are still groping for clues in the murder of soldier Orly Dubi of Netanya, who disappeared on November 15 and whose body was found near Netanya a month later. It is still unknown when or how Dubi was murdered, police said yesterday.

Dubi may still have been alive on November 23, eight days after she disappeared after visiting her grandmother in Haifa, and was definitely still alive on November 20, according to information received by the police.

Police disclosed yesterday that Dubi was seen on November 20 with a woman soldier in air force uniform at 11 a.m. in Tel Aviv's central bus station. According to less positive information, Dubi was seen in an army base on November 23. It is not clear whether police already had this information before Dubi's body was found on December 14 in a field south of Netanya.

Police yesterday called on anyone who might have seen Dubi on the night of her disappearance on an Egged bus from Haifa to Tel Aviv after 10:40 p.m. or on the bus from Haifa to Eilat, which left at 11 p.m. that night, to come forward. They also are asking the air force soldier who was seen with Dubi on November 15 to come forward and testify, as well as anyone who gave a lift in his or her car to a woman soldier from Haifa to Tel Aviv on November 15.

It was learned yesterday that due to the advanced state of decay in which Dubi's body was found, it is difficult to determine how and when she died.

The police team investigating Dubi's murder believed until now that it could solve the case without revealing to the public — and to the person or persons responsible — how little it knew, it was learned. But with the passing of time the team feared that anyone who might have seen Dubi after her disappearance would forget, and therefore called on the public to help.

El Salvador troops attack guerrillas in mountain area

SAN MIGUEL, El Salvador (Reuters). — Some 2,000 troops pushed on against left-wing guerrillas in El Salvador's northern mountains on Friday on the 10th day of battles which have boosted the army's flagging morale.

Colonel Domingo Monterrosa, who is in charge of the country's three easternmost provinces, said that the army operation in the province of Morazan was the biggest ever mounted there.

The latest fighting in El Salvador's four-year-old war started with a guerrilla attack on a strategic communications base on the sharp ridge of the Cacahuatique Mountains on December 13.

But Monterrosa summoned 2,000 troops and 22 helicopters for a counter-attack, which is still in progress.

Military and diplomatic sources have said that the rapid reaction and tight coordination under the newly appointed Monterrosa showed an important change in the U.S.-backed army's performance and a boost for morale after a series of setbacks.

Fighting around Ciudad Barrios, some 110 kilometres from the capital, was renewed on Thursday night as guerrillas moved reinforcements from the west to hit Monterrosa's operation on the town's exposed southern flank.

But parachute battalion troops moved south towards Ciudad Barrios following intelligence reports of a guerrilla concentration there, battalion commander Major Luis Mario Furlios said.

He said guerrilla movements in Ciudad Barrios were probably a decoy to pull troops back from their thrust into the north.

Nicaraguan bishop denies he was kidnapped by rebels

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (Reuters). — An American-born bishop turned up on Friday in Honduras, denying Nicaraguan claims that he had been kidnapped by right-wing rebels there.

Monsignor Salvador Schaeffer, 65, said he left Nicaragua of his own free will to accompany Miskito Indians in their flight from the country.

Schaeffer disappeared from a Miskito Indian town in northern Nicaragua on Tuesday. The Nicaraguan government said he had been kidnapped by U.S.-backed anti-government rebels.

"I was not kidnapped," he told reporters. "I travelled to Honduras to accompany 3,100 Miskito Indians fleeing the Sandinista regime."

Schaeffer, bishop of the Nicaraguan Caribbean port of Bluefields, said the Miskitos had been planning to seek sanctuary in Honduras for several months, said he intends to return to Nicaragua to continue his pastoral work.

Schaeffer, a member of the Capuchin religious order, moved to Nicaragua in 1947. His diocese covers the country's largest and easternmost province of Zelaya, inhabited mainly by Indians.

Critics of the Nicaraguan left-wing government have accused it of oppressing the Miskitos in a campaign to integrate them.

Pakistan denies involvement in Afghan border post raid

ISAMABAD (AP). — Pakistan yesterday rejected allegations by Afghanistan's Soviet-backed government that it assisted Moslem insurgents in a raid on a border checkpoint that left 20 of its soldiers dead.

A Foreign Office spokesman accused the Kabul government of making "baseless allegations" and said Pakistan consistently has adhered to a policy of non-interference in the affairs of other states, including Afghanistan.

"It is a well-known fact that the resistance throughout the length and breadth of Afghanistan is an indigenous freedom struggle being carried on by the heroic Afghan people," the official said. He said last Sunday's raid on the Torkham checkpoint, near the Khyber Pass, was mounted by guerrillas from inside Afghanistan.

"The repetition of baseless allegations of Pakistan's involvement is only a device to misrepresent the true nature of this struggle," he said.

The government spokesman added that Pakistan is committed to finding a peaceful solution of the Afghan problem based on repeatedly endorsed resolutions at the UN and other international forums.

Indian workers paralyzed by seeds given as wages

NEW DELHI (AP). — Thousands of impoverished farm labourers in India's largest state have been paralyzed by eating toxic seeds they received as payment from landowners, a state official confirmed on Thursday.

The Indian Express, an independent daily newspaper, said there had been "mass outbreaks" of paralysis among workers, many of them bonded labourers, in the central state of Madhya Pradesh.

"That's true," R.K. Mishra, a state government spokesman in New Delhi, said in a telephone interview. He did not have an exact figure for the number of victims. Communications in the state are primitive.

Mishra confirmed that landowners had been paying labourers in the form of a poisonous seed known as khesari dal. If eaten regularly for several months, it affects the central nervous system and causes paralysis in the legs.

"The state has tried to stop its cultivation, but unless it is replaced by other crops, the people will starve," he added.

Mishra said officials have been trying to spread the word that the seeds are not harmful after boiling in water.

Khesari dal is used for growing crops that can withstand almost any weather conditions, and has become a staple diet among rural workers in India.

Madhya Pradesh is a mainly rural, underdeveloped state midway between the cities of Calcutta and Bombay.

Guinea quake claims 300 over 4 days

ABIDJAN (Reuters). — Three hundred people died in a strong earthquake which hit Guinea on Wednesday night, and tremors continued to shake parts of the country yesterday, Conakry Radio reported.

The radio, monitored here, said 300 people were missing while at least 16 villages were destroyed, making thousands homeless in various parts of the West African country.

Some 20 areas were hit between Wednesday night, when the major quake occurred, and yesterday at 6:00 a.m. GMT, it added.

The earth shook again yesterday morning from Gaoual, in north-west Guinea, to Kerouane in the south, some 125 kilometres from the Ivory Coast border, the radio said.

The worst-hit area so far was Gaoual, some 300 kilometres from the capital of Conakry, where 143 people died on Wednesday night, the radio said.

The observatory of M'bour, in Senegal, said the quake measured 6.3 on the Richter Scale.

Quakes are rare in West Africa, but Wednesday's was felt in neighbouring countries including Guinea-Bissau, Senegal and Gambia. Authorities in those countries reported no casualties and minimal damage except in the lower Casamance area of Senegal, where damage was more serious, although details were not immediately available.

Guinean President Ahmed Sekou Toure, whose birth place of Faranah, in eastern Guinea, was among areas hit, appealed on Friday for international help and decreed 48 hours' mourning.

Mozambique rescues Soviets from rebels

MAPUTO (Reuters). — Eight of 24 Soviet geologists kidnapped by rebels in Mozambique last August have been freed by the Mozambican army, a Soviet Embassy spokesman said here on Thursday.

Two of the 16 others died while being held captive by members of the South African-backed Mozambique National Resistance, he added.

They were kidnapped while working on a project in Zambezia province adjacent to Malawi. The eight freed men were liberated at different times and have returned to the Soviet Union, the spokesman said.

10 Polish unionists held for illegal broadcasts

WARSAW (AP). — Ten underground Solidarity unionists have been arrested in possession of "western-made, high class" radio equipment used to transmit clandestine union programmes in western Poland, the Polish news agency PAP reported on Thursday.

The agency, quoting officials in Gornow Wielkopolski near the East German frontier, said the 10 also had printing presses and "thousands of leaflets and bulletins printed without permission."

PAP said police found illegal books and confiscated them during a series of raids, but did not say when they took place. The agency said the radio equipment was used by the banned union's Radio Solidarity.

London researchers report clue in how cancer starts

LONDON (AP). — A step toward understanding how cancer starts was reported on Friday by five London researchers who told of finding a number of genes which lie dormant in normal cells but are activated in tumour cells.

One of the genes comes from the group associated with the body's immune defence system, the researchers said.

They also noted that the gene is active in embryos but normally dor-

Group charts QE2 liner to ring in the year 2000

NEW YORK (Reuters). — A group dedicated to international cooperation has chartered the liner Queen Elizabeth 2 for the ultimate new year party — at midnight on December 31, 1999, at the Great Pyramid of Cheops.

The Millennium Society signed an agreement last Thursday with Cunard and the Egyptian government. Edward McNally, 27, a Washington lawyer who is chairman of the society, said the event is being planned so far in advance to counteract the despair caused by fears of nuclear war and films such as The Day After, portraying atomic devastation.

"We are doing it now to show that we are not a generation of despair," he said. "Sixteen years from today, you will find us again aboard this ship, our hair a bit more grey, perhaps a bit less spring in our walk... but you will not find us with any less hope or idealism or any less confidence in the ultimate triumph of humankind."

Late in December, 1999, 1,800 people will sail from New York to Alexandria aboard the QE2, attending seminars and discussions on world peace as they travel. A further 1,800 will attend the same functions on a return voyage after the new year party.

The Millennium Society was founded in 1979 by students at Yale University. It now includes members from all over the world.

The lifespan of the QE2 is expected to stretch into the 21st century, but if it does not, McNally said Cunard will provide its latest flagship, "Perhaps, the King Charles," he said.

U.S., Canada say they foiled plot against Guyana regime

CLEVELAND (Reuters). — The arrests of eight people in the U.S. and Canada have ended a two-month investigation into an alleged plot to overthrow the government of Guyana, according to police.

The arrests followed an investigation by Ontario provincial police and U.S. customs agents into "alleged criminal activities by the Conservative Party of Guyana," a police spokesman said on Friday in Toronto.

He said the CPG is alleged to have bought weapons and ammunition for undercover officers of both countries.

Five men were apprehended in Cleveland, one in Columbus, Ohio, and two in Mississauga, Ontario. The arrests were made as the suspects took delivery on Wednesday in Cleveland of the weapons from undercover Canadian and U.S. agents, police said.

In Cleveland, assistant U.S. attorney John Siegel said an undercover agent had met the suspects, and during the meeting, the accused men discussed using the weapons to overthrow the government of Guyana.

The weapons, he said, were to be taken to New York, then smuggled to Guyana concealed in new furniture. Toronto police said the CPG members had approached the agents thinking they were affiliated with organized crime.

"Agreements were subsequently made with regard to certain privileges which would be provided to organized crime should the CPG be successful in overthrowing the current government," a police spokesman said.

The suspects placed an order for machine guns, grenade launchers, ammunition and pistols, he said.

12 wounded, one seriously, in Paris restaurant blast

PARIS (AP). — Doctors yesterday amputated the leg of a 38-year-old woman who was injured along with 11 other people in a bomb attack on one of France's most prestigious restaurants.

The attack late Friday ripped through an outside wall of the Grand Vefour restaurant and sprayed shards of glass on about 210 patrons and employees. No group had claimed responsibility for the attack by early yesterday afternoon, police said.

Various Islamic fundamentalist groups have threatened to attack targets in France unless the government of President Francois Mitterrand withdraws its troops from Lebanon. Police refused to speculate on a possible Middle Eastern connection.

Maurine Chretien-Rudetzi, the commercial director for a French clothing firm, was listed in serious condition after surgery.

The others who were injured — five Americans, two Japanese and four French citizens — were either treated at the scene or hospitalized overnight with minor injuries. No group had claimed responsibility for the attack by late yesterday afternoon, police said. A spokesman for the French Secretary of State for the Interior said the motive was "purely political." "We have absolutely no indication of racketeering angle," he said.

Police yesterday said they had new leads on the case. A spokesman for the criminal division of judicial police said the bomb was "medium power" but its nature was unknown because investigators had "found nothing" in its remains.

They said the bomb was placed under a grating at street level side the emergency exit of restaurant.

The deadliest recent terrorist attack against a Paris restaurant on August 9, 1982, when six people were killed and 22 injured machine gun and grenade attacks against Jo Goldenberg's restaurant in a Jewish neighbourhood.

Pretoria: Angolans killed 5 South West Africa troops

PRETORIA (Reuters). — South Africa said last night that Angolan troops killed five soldiers of the South West Africa Territory Force (SWATF) during an action against guerrillas fighting for the independence of Namibia (South West Africa).

South African Defence Force chief General Constand Viljoen said in a statement that Angolan soldiers are increasingly interfering with South African operations against guerrillas of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

The statement came after South African announced earlier yesterday that its forces were fighting SWAPO guerrillas in southern Angola trying to cross over the border from the former Portuguese colony into Namibia.

The SADF and the 14,000-strong

SWATF, mostly black troops integrated in command and by Viljoen said the deaths of the soldiers during the past few days of serious concern.

The SADF and the SWATF left with no choice other than defend themselves when Angolan forces interfere in this way, V added.

The defence force's initial statement said: "Elements of the se forces are involved in a limited campaign against SWAPO terror southern Angola." It went on to say only SWAPO forces and Angolan troops.

The announcement followed newspaper reports here on Radio Angola, which said South African troops had attacked Angolan government forces in southern part of Angola.

Week of U.S. storms takes 137 lives

NEW YORK (AP). — At least 137 people have died during seven days of ice storms, snow, freezing rain and cold that by yesterday had spared only Florida in the continental U.S.

A weather forecaster in South Dakota warned that the weather there "can literally kill you." Nine people died on a slick Texas highway when a truck and church bus smashed head-on.

"It's just plumb miserable," Doug McCloskey, a sheriff's deputy in the western Montana town of Wibaux said on Friday as the temperature dropped to minus 48 centigrade.

The big menace for the coast of the U.S. was a moose packed Pacific Ocean storm heading for central California. Warnings that winds could reach kilometres per hour were posted San Francisco.

At least 50 cities around the country broke or tied temperature records on Friday.

Swiss jail Soviet for spying on S. Afr.

ZURICH (Reuters). — A court on Thursday sentenced a Soviet citizen to three years in prison after he was found guilty of spying in Switzerland against South Africa.

The man, who calls himself Mikhail Vasilyevich Nikolayev but whose true identity the court called unknown, was arrested outside the Zurich art gallery last January and was alleged to be waiting to receive secret South African documents.

The microfilmed information was due to be handed over to him by a woman who has lately been in South Africa in a major spy charges said. The trial of the year-old man, described as a translator, was held in camera.

The woman involved in the case is Swiss-born Ruth Gerhardt, the wife of a former senior African naval officer, Commodore Dieter Gerhardt, one-time mandant of the Simonstown dockyard in South Africa.

UK scrubs aircraft carrier's Japan visit

TOKYO (Reuters). — Britain has told Japan it has cancelled a planned good-will visit to Japanese ports early next year by the Royal Navy aircraft carrier Invincible, Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe said on Friday.

Abe said Japan had replied that it would welcome future good-will visits by British Navy vessels but had reminded Britain of its policy not to possess, make or allow entry to nuclear arms.

The Australian government refused the Invincible permission to enter dry dock in Sydney early next week for repairs because its call in line with Royal Navy's refusal to say whether it carried nuclear weapons.

Help Keep the Infant Rafael Nissim alive

The infant Nissim was born with a serious defect, his gutlet being removed a considerable distance from his stomach. This condition will not enable the infant to survive. The defect can be corrected by a difficult, complicated and dangerous operation. As this defect occurs only rarely there are only very few medical centres, in the U.S.A., which are able to perform the operation. Nissim's parents, on the advice of the physicians who treat him, have decided to take him to one of these centres for the operation.

The expenses will amount to about $50,000. The father, who is a salaried employee is unable to raise such a sum. We therefore appeal to the public.

Please give Nissim a chance to live. We the undersigned recommend and appeal to you to help with your donations.

Dramatic Lesson

marks its annual fund-raising drive Wednesday (December 28). Levavi visits the Association for the retarded's social club in Tel Aviv, where drama lessons are fun.

WE are out in an open area, the drama teacher, said. "do you see?" Trees, she suggested. "What do you see then asked. "Fruit, are orchards around here," said. "After a few minutes, the plants got tired of imitating a scene. I see something that looks like a bomb. Let's run and call the police." The drama teacher, Ora, said. "They are most frightened of work with the retarded," their teacher, Dr. Yael Yisraeli, said. "All the other groups seem more attractive. "In the end, when too many students sign up for one placement and too few for another, we have to divide them up among the various assignments and some of those who choose other placements end up working here. "When I came the first time, I expected them not to understand anything and not to be able to talk to me," one of the students, Rita, said. "I was surprised to discover that they understand everything, even though you have to simplify things for them. Ora, the teacher at the lesson I attended, said her aim had been to concentrate on the idea of place; the difference between, say, the confined space of a factory floor and the open space of a field. "When they talk about their experiences, they tend to centre on what people gave them or told them, not on what they saw and experienced in a new environment," she said. Therefore, in going around the room and asking everyone to describe a trip he or she had taken, she kept asking what they saw, whether houses or trees or other objects were big or small, what new sounds or smells they had experienced. In the process, the lesson dealt with other issues. Her work on the concept of place had begun with each participant choosing a small section of the room to be his or her "house." One participant decided to go into another's house by force. The "owner" of the threatened house objected and a confrontation developed. Ora asked if anybody could suggest another way for Danny, the would-be trespasser, to get into the house other than by force. Rivka suggested that Danny ask permission to come in. Danny stubbornly refused, so Ora told Rivka to try. It worked, and the resulting improvisation was a proposal of marriage which Rivka accepted, though she hastened to add (in an aside to the audience) that "it's only make-believe."

Akim students in drama class.

THE CLUB serves two different groups of retarded young adults. The first group, which meets from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. under the name Maor, are individuals still employed in sheltered workshops but being prepared for jobs on the open market. The second group, which meets from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. under the name Kochav, are individuals already employed in competitive jobs, but needing a social environment in which they can fit comfortably, in which they are not "different."

Angolans in West Africa

students in this particular class were retarded men and in their twenties and thirties of an Akim (Association for the Retarded) social club in Tel Aviv. The club offers a variety of educational, as well as social activities, from group social work students) which put sex education and family sports, folk dancing, and discussions of current events. Doubtless, the discussion had preceded the drama lesson the terrorist attack on a Jerusalem was the subject, in the bomb improvisation purpose at the club is not give them a social outlet, but help them make progress fuller integration into society. Menu of the month

Jeanne Weisgal

- 1 tsp. each: salt, sugar
- 1/2 tsp. fresh white pepper
- Combine all the ingredients in a large glass bowl and mix well. Cover with a plate and place a heavy item — such as a can — on top. Let the salad marinate in the fridge for 4 hours, or even overnight. Keeps well for days. (Note: A mandoline is perfect for slicing cucumber thinly.)
- Cream Puffs
- Cream puffs are wonderfully versatile. For appetizers, make tiny ones and fill with chicken, tuna or egg salad. For dessert, make large or small ones and fill with whipped cream, ice cream or lemon filling. Delicious served with hot fudge sauce poured over!
- Makes 20 large or 40 small puffs.
- 1 cup water
- 125 gr. margarine
- 1 cup flour
- 4 eggs
- In a two-litre saucepan, heat water and margarine. When margarine is melted and water is boiling, add flour all at once and beat vigorously with a wooden spoon until the batter leaves the sides of the pan. Remove from the heat and beat in the eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition.
- Put heaping teaspoons of the dough (for large puffs), or scant teaspoons (for small puffs) on a greased cookie-sheet, leaving a lot of room between each one. Bake in a preheated 233° C. (450° F.) oven for 20 minutes. Lower the heat to 163° C. (325° F.) and bake an additional 20 minutes. Take one out, if it doesn't fall, they are done. Cool on a rack.
- Cut the puffs open, crosswise, and remove some of the doughy insides before filling.
- Lemon Filling
- This is an airy, tangy filling.
- 5 eggs, separated
- 1/2 cup lemon juice
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup flour
- In the top of a double-boiler, whisk egg-yolks, lemon juice and sugar. Stirring with the whisk, heat the mixture over simmering water until it is thick. Remove from the heat.
- Beat egg-whites until stiff and quickly fold them into the yolk mixture. Keep in the fridge, covered, until needed.
- Note: If you have a food processor, peel the lemons with a vegetable peeler, taking only a thin strip without the white pulp. With the steel knife, combine the sugar and the peel and run the machine until the peel is grated.
- YEAST DOUGHS: English Muffins
- If you've had a yen for English muffins, you no more.
- Makes about 12.
- 2 pkgs. dry yeast
- 2 tbs. sugar
- 1/2 cup lukewarm water
- 2 cups scalded milk or hot potato water (see Note)
- 60 gr. margarine
- 4 tbs. white vinegar
- 6 cups flour, approximately
- 4 tsp. salt
- cornmeal, about 1/4 cup
- In a large mixing bowl, "proof" yeast by letting it sit in a warm place for 15 minutes.
- Add margarine and vinegar to the scalded milk or hot potato water and cool to lukewarm.
- Add the liquid mixture to the yeast mixture. Add 4 cups flour and salt and mix well. Turn out onto a well floured surface and knead, adding 1 to 2 cups extra flour until the dough is smooth and elastic. Form the dough into a ball and place in a greased bowl, turning the dough to grease on all sides. Cover with a towel and let rise in a warm place until doubled, about 1 hour.
- Punch down dough, turn out onto a floured surface and knead until smooth and elastic. Divide the dough into two parts.
- Roll out each part to a thickness of 1 cm. Cut rounds with a 10 cm. cookie-cutter. Re-form scraps and continue rolling and cutting in the same way.
- Dip each side of the rounds in cornmeal and place on a cookie-sheet. Cover the rounds with a towel and let rise in a warm place until doubled, about 30 minutes.
- Brown the muffins on each side on an ungreased griddle for eight to 12 minutes, over medium to medium-high heat, until golden brown, turning the muffins frequently.
- Cool the muffins on a rack. Split with a fork and toast.
- After they are cool, English muffins can be frozen well wrapped in foil. Thaw unwrapped before splitting and toasting.
- Note: To make potato water: Peel and dice 1 medium potato into small pieces. In a small saucepan, place the potato with 2 1/2 cups water and boil until the potato is mushy, about 20 minutes. Strain into a bowl through a coarse strainer, pressing hard on the solids.
- Bread Rounds
- This simple bread is easy and quickly made, start-to-finish in about 1 1/2 hours. A lovely accompaniment for soups and salads — a good bread for this dinner menu. Makes 2 large rounds.
- 1 pkg. dry yeast
- 1 cup lukewarm water
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1 1/2 tsp. salt
- 2 tsp. olive oil
- 3 1/2 cups flour, approx.
- 3/4 cup olive oil, about 1 tsp.
- In a large mixing bowl, proof yeast mixed with water and sugar in a warm place for 15 minutes. Add salt, olive oil and flour. Mix to combine well. Turn out onto a lightly floured surface and knead until smooth and elastic, about 5 minutes, adding up to 1/4 cup extra flour, if necessary.
- Form the dough into a ball and place in an olive oil-greased bowl, turning the dough to grease on all sides. Cover with a towel and let rise in a warm place until doubled, about 1 hour. 15 minutes before the 1 hour rising time is finished, preheat the oven to 260° C. (500° F.).
- Punch down dough and turn out onto a lightly floured surface. Knead for a minute or two and divide in half. Work each half separately, keeping the other half covered with an inverted bowl.
- Roll one-half into a round about 25 cm. in diameter. Place the round on an ungreased cookie sheet. Brush the round lightly with olive oil, about 1/4 tsp.
- Bake for eight to 10 minutes on the lowest shelf in the preheated oven.
- Repeat the above with the second half.
- Cut the rounds into 6 or 8 wedges with a knife or a pizza cutter and serve.
- The bread can be frozen, well wrapped in foil. Unwrap to thaw.

A private miracle

Aviva Bar-Am remembers the day she became a mother.

WAS I the only mother choking back tears as my child sang and lit Hanukkah candles at the kindergarten party? I looked at my healthy, handsome, lively boy and couldn't believe my own private miracle. It was after 9 p.m. one evening when I unlocked the door to our empty apartment. Since we had no children I often worked unusually late hours, making home visits to distressed families of troubled schoolchildren. My husband's schedule was also long and irregular, and I generally spent the late evening in front of the T.V., writing reports. There was no way I could have known that from tonight on, my life would change, completely. After turning on the gas under the teakettle I flopped onto the couch. The telephone rang just as the kettle began to whistle. It was my husband. There was barely controlled excitement in his voice when he spoke. "I've been looking for you for hours!" he exclaimed. "I wanted to congratulate you. You are about to become the mother of a fine, healthy baby!" "But it wasn't supposed to happen this soon!" I blurted out. It seemed that our adoption worker, unable to locate me, had found my husband at work, and told him the news hours earlier. In a daze, I called her at home. I had waited nine years for this day. "Please," I asked her, "is it really true? Is there a baby for us to adopt?" I could hear the smile in her voice as she answered, "You have a beautiful baby son. He is two weeks old and we want him to leave the hospital as soon as possible. Why don't you come to my office tomorrow morning at 9.00 and bring clothes for the baby." My husband was scheduled to work that day, but he was adamant. "No husband — no baby" she insisted. And my husband, after several long telephone calls, arranged to be a few hours late for work. There was so much to do, there were so many plans to make, so many people to tell. First I called one of my colleagues at work and asked her to take over for me — to cancel appointments, to explain to our boss. When she wanted to know what the baby looked like, I didn't know what to tell her. I was in such a state of shock that I hadn't asked a single question about his weight, size or appearance. Of course we had no clothes, no furniture and no baby food. The adoption agency believed, correctly, that every day counts in the life of a child, and they often can't give you extra time to prepare for his arrival. Our respective parents were immediately mobilized — mine, to find a bed, bathtub and infant chair, my husband's parents to bring clothes and diapers. Over the years I had learned to avoid those of my friends with new babies, in order not to feel so much pain. I therefore knew nothing about the care of newborns. A helpful friend informed us that babies should be kept in sterile surroundings, and thus we spent most of the night scrubbing ceilings, walls and doors with cleanser. Then we tried to find a name for the baby. "It has to sound good in English and in Hebrew," I said to my husband. "And it can't have any funny nicknames." So we went through the alphabet letter by letter, until we arrived at one we both liked, Guy. At 8.30 a.m. we started out for the adoption agency. I wondered over and over what those first few moments would be like. Our adoption worker was ready for us when we arrived — we drove immediately to the hospital where the baby had been born two weeks before. There we were shown to a little room and the baby was wheeled in to us. I'll never forget that first look at our son. He was so very small, with black hair and dark eyes. His skin was clear and his features well defined. Since I was afraid to pick him up, my husband took him in his arms, smiling gently. Then he held the baby out to me. Very carefully I settled him in the crook of my elbow. "Hello!" I whispered, putting my cheek next to his. He was fast asleep. My husband and I looked at each other and in tacit agreement immediately took him out to the nurses' station, explaining that we wanted to take him home. Five minutes later we were on our way. ONCE BACK at the house my husband packed a small suitcase and left for work. Several good friends had been waiting on my doorstep, and they fussed over me, preparing formula, sterilizing bottles, putting clothes in the cupboard, and giving me advice. I just sat, sort of dazed, looking at the baby. In a very short time, of course, I learned what to feed him and how to change him, but since I was still not totally sure of myself, a friend helped me give him his first bath. That night I sat up all night by his bed, watching his little back rise and fall as he breathed, and feeling my love grow. A week after our baby came home, the social worker came to visit. Our son made a disgruntled noise from his bedroom and my husband and I rushed to his side. "Oh no," said our social worker when we came back. "You shouldn't jump the minute the baby makes a noise. You'll spoil him." Notwithstanding the fact that she was probably right, I was extremely annoyed. I certainly knew how to take care of my own son — and it was still a privilege for me to have a baby to run to! Through the years there have been some problems, a few directly connected to adoption and others more obscure. One of our biggest difficulties was with our dog, a highly intelligent mongrel who was spoiled rotten. He never recovered from his jealousy, and in anger began biting everyone who came into the house. We had to find him a new home. Then there was fatigue. Our friends and relatives were even more thrilled with our adoption of a baby than one usually is over the birth of a child. People came in droves, not realizing that the emotional impact of adoption — including the surprise and the anticlimax — can be more exhausting than undergoing a physical labour. We were pleased that everyone was excited for us and we were so proud of our son that we didn't limit our visitors. Between taking care of the baby during the day, keeping the house clean, serving cake and coffee to well-wishers, continuing with that part of my job which I couldn't leave and feeding the baby at night, I was exhausted. One visitor, very pregnant, said to me: "When will you have a child of your own?" No one else said anything so stupid, but I wonder, were other people thinking such thoughts? Wasn't it obvious that this baby was my own? There were neighbourhood children who asked my husband where our boy's "mother and father" were. Over the years we explained to both children and adults that parents are the people who hug a child and discipline him, who feed him and educate him, who sit with him at night when he has a bad dream, and go to his Hanukkah parties. Yes, we've come back to that Hanukkah party. A few months ago I received a telephone call from our adoption worker. We talked for almost 20 minutes, about a mutual acquaintance, and as the conversation came to a close she said, "By the way, we have another baby for you." We had been waiting for years for a second child, but it was such unexpected and marvelous news that I really could not believe it. "It's a little girl," she answered. "I'm coming tomorrow morning to tell you and your husband and your son all about her." My husband was on army reserve duty. When I told the worker she insisted he had to come home. Just like the first time she said, "No husband — no baby." This time we knew what to do with a baby. This time we had furniture, and clothes. And this time we also had a big brother. But the biggest difference of all was my feeling about the first meeting with our baby. When the three of us went to pick her up I didn't worry. I knew that whatever she was like we would take her home, and love her, and she would be ours, forever. Today is edited by Joanna Yehiel.

French marathon star daunted by wind

By JACK LEON
Post Sports Reporter

JEV. — French long-distance star Chantal Langlace, 28, of the women's event in time at last week's annual of Galilee International marathon here, despite a vicious 50 per hour wind, has been coming in at least five marathons a year for the past decade. In the mid she was twice world champion, the punishing 42,195-k. race. She is currently the 100-world record holder, with a time of seven hours, 23 minutes. The strong wind which blew during the race made the competition the slowest to date. The unassuming 1.58 m. tall runner, who is finishing off the previous women's 1. She crossed the finishing line more than seven minutes ahead of Shmueli, while Shmueli's sister Mazal Shalom came in 11th.

physical education teacher Amiens has lost count of her number of marathons — or how many she has won. But, as she guesses, Chantal told me, she anticipated in more than 50 winning some 20. The winner Hans Pfisterer from Germany only took up the marathon two years ago, after concentrating on the 5,000 and 10,000 metre races. For her, who will be 30 on Tuesday, this is her first victory in five years over the classic distance. No one of the seven sets of races have now been won by her.

Israel's No. 2 player Shahar Perlis last week finished as runner-up in the tournament in East London, the third leg of the ATP's $140,000 South African Datsun satellite circuit. In the final, Perlis was beaten 3-6, 6-2, 6-1 by home player Eddie Edwards, whose current ATP world ranking of 166th is 130 places above the Haifaite. In the two earlier events in the five-tournament series, Perlis reached the quarters in the opener and then bowed out in the second round.

Betar pipped at the post

By PAUL KOHN
Post Sports Reporter

YAVNE. — The Maccabi Yavne management played a foul game yesterday, selling 4,500 tickets for the local side's game against league leaders Betar Jerusalem, though they knew their small ground could only seat one-third of that number. The genuine ticket holders were joined by 4,000 gate-crashers, so the handful of police had to contend with a crowd that was out of control, and referee Ya'akov Sheiner had to delay the start of the game for 18 minutes.

Eventually, with the crowd sitting right up to the touch-line, Sheiner reluctantly allowed the match to be played. Despite the appalling conditions, Betar gave an exhibition of class football throughout the first half and took the lead with an Uri Malmilian rocket from 20m. after 19 minutes. But they were pipped at the post, two minutes from full time, when Betar defender Ehad Ashash handed in the penalty area. Zion Ya'acov made no mistake with his shot from the spot. Shlomo Kirat was Betar's best player, and Avi Eisenberg played a fine game for Yavne.

The other league leaders, Hapoel Tel Aviv, were as lucky to draw their game as Betar were unlucky not to take the full three points from theirs. Hapoel's opponents, bottom-placed Bnei Yehuda, were by no means overawed by facing a team at the other end of the table, and had the edge for most of the game. They delighted their 5,000 home spectators at the Hatikva Quarter by taking the lead through a David Zalman goal in the 40th minute. Gil Landau scored an equalizer in the 55th minute, but Hillel Kaplan put the home team ahead again with a blinder in the 77th minute. This was Kaplan's first goal and second game for Bnei Yehuda, since he was transferred to them from Maccabi Haifa for a tidy $54m million. But Lady Luck smiled on the underdog Hapoel Tel Aviv side. With four minutes to go, Shabtay Levy snatched an equalizer when the defence made a gross error in their goalmouth.

Other first time scorers for their new clubs were Zahi Armeli for Maccabi Haifa in their 3-0 win over Maccabi Jaffa, and Ronen Rockman for Shimshon in their 2-0 defeat of Betar Tel Aviv. Shalom Avitan, repentant for hitting one of his own team, came back from suspension to score Hapoel Beersheba's winner over Ramat Amidar.

Shalom Tikva scored his first goal of the season for Maccabi Netanya, in that team's 1-0 home win over Yehud. Only some splendid goalkeeping by national team goalie Arye Haviv kept the score down to one goal. Yehud's Shalom Rockman was sent off by referee Yosef Diamant in the 27th minute, for fouling David Pizanti, leaving Yehud with 10 men.

Another first time goalscorer was Haim Tzabari for Maccabi Tel Aviv in the first minute at the Bloomfield Stadium. Maccabi went on to thrash Hakoah Ramat Gan 4-1, with goals by Eli Drieks, Vicky Peretz and Moti Iwanir.

Brazil start favourites to win the World Cup

By PAUL KOHN

No European soccer team has yet managed to bring the World Cup across the Atlantic, and with the 1986 finals taking place in Mexico, the London bookmakers, those most trustworthy guides of what will be, are betting that that tradition will not be broken. Ladbrokes make Brazil 7 to 2 favourites to win the Cup, followed by Argentina at 5 to 1, Uruguay and World Cup holders Italy at 7 to 1, West Germany at 8 to 1 and England at a generous 16 to 1 odds.

The World Cup always produces its shock results, as one would expect when 121 countries around the globe invest tremendous efforts and resources to prepare their football teams for the encounters to come. The draw at FIFA headquarters in Zurich last week laid the smoothest of paths to Mexico for Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay. They are top seeded and do not meet in qualifying groups, and, even if any of them do not head their group, they will have a second play-off chance.

Italy, the winners of the Cup in Spain in 1982, and Mexico, the host country, are among the 24 finalists who do not have to play any qualifying matches. Italy were the surprise packet of the finals in Spain, ousting both Brazil and Argentina. The Italians have not done much since, failing even to win a place in next year's European championship finals.

Host countries have an excellent record in the World Cup. Uruguay, Italy, England, West Germany and Argentina all winning the trophy at their home stadiums, but Mexico has not yet the sophistication and stamina to be a fancied candidate.

To win a World Cup, a country has to have soccer power in depth. It is not enough to be able to produce a sparkling performance that shocks the best. Algeria, Cameroon, Honduras and Northern Ireland all did that in Spain, but they could not maintain the spark when it most mattered, and all the "heavy-weights" finally went, through to the latter stages. It needs toughness as much as flair, and a combination of both is provided by countries like Argentina, Brazil and Italy.

FIFA last week worked out a draw loaded heavily in favour of the Europeans. Of the 24 finalists, Europe is assured of 13 places. The seven European groups pose some fascinating problems. The draw for Group 5 has thrown together Austria, Hungary and Holland, ranked by FIFA in that order. In Group 1, Poland and Belgium appear as the main contenders. Group 2 should see West Germany safely through, with Czechoslovakia, Portugal and Sweden in strong contention for the second place. Portugal recently ousted the USSR from the European championships, with the Czechs and Swedes shown the exit door by Rumania.

Rumania has England and Northern Ireland as its main challengers, with Turkey and Finland also in Group 3. France and Yugoslavia look evenly matched to Group 4, with East Germany and Bulgaria in the same grouping. The USSR and Denmark must be strong favourites to go down Mexico-way from Group 6, with Switzerland and Eric next best. Spain, Scotland and Wales should have a rare set-to in Group 7.

No explanation has so far yet been given why Israel could not have been added to one of the three smaller European groups, as it was in the last World Cup. It does not make much geographic sense to move Israel to far-off Oceania, especially as that will mean that Israeli soccer fans will not be able to see any of the World Cup games in its group.

Form and team-building between now and Mexico 1986 vary tremendously in every country. No one can predict from where the next Pele, Johann Cruyff, George Best or Paulo Rossi — each a matchwinner on his own — will come.

Anyone looking for a long shot might note the progressive Denmark (50 to 1), which this season won crucial matches at Wembley and in Athens.

Rugby lesson

Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Western Province Maccabi rugby team yesterday opened their tour here with a handsome 23-6 victory over a combined kibbutzim XV at Yizra'el. In summery sunshine, the 1,000 spectators saw the young South Africans run in three tries through their three-quarters Meltzer, Gluckman and Amier. Kaplan converted one try, dropped a goal and put over two penalties, for a personal tally of 11 points.

The host's points came from two penalties scored by the ever-accurate Ophir Halevi. In two curtain-raisers, Hapnel Ra'anana and Yizra'el shared 12 points in an under-18 competition. In an under-15 match, Kfar Blum defeated Ra'anana 28-8.

Time to travel

By DON GOULD
Post Basketball Reporter

During the coming two weeks, basketball action continues, but shifts away from our shores to three "friendly" tournaments in Europe. Hapoel Ramat Gan starts off the action on Tuesday in Harlem, near Amsterdam, playing in a round robin against Le Mans of France, as well as two Dutch teams and an American squad from Chicago.

Maccabi Tel Aviv makes its annual visit to London to participate in the Crystal Palace Tournament against the host team and other European squads. The tournament starts December 29. National coach Arye Malyniak will bring an early version of his team to Stockholm, Sweden for matches against the Swedish national team and teams from Yugoslavia and Greece.

Lual league action took a break Monday night after the 17th of 22 league rounds was completed. League play will continue January 15. The battle for the eight playoff spots is still fierce. The two last-place teams will be relegated to the lower league next year. Maccabi Darum, with a 1-16 record, will certainly go down, but the possibilities as to the other descending team are wide open.

State Cup action moved along last Thursday evening and progresses to quarter-final action on January 9.

Maccabi Tel Aviv had problems, as do all teams, visiting Kiryat Motzkin, but came back with a 34-35 halftime deficit to eliminate their hosts, 74-66. Mickey Berkovitz led the charge, with 20 points.

Jackie "The Franchise" Rubin of Maccabi Darum won the battle of the high scores over Darom Gamchee of Maccabi Ramat Gan, 41-33, but Gamchee got more support from his team-mates and Maccabi Ramat Gan won the State Cup contest, 91-84.

In other Thursday night State Cup action, Lavone Mercer with 25 points and Pinney Hozee with 22 more than offset Chaim Zlotikman's 35 points, to enable Hapoel Tel Aviv to stomp Hapoel Haifa, 103-90. With 37 points from James Terry and 25 from Greg Cook, Maccabi Haifa surged to an easy 105-57 victory over Elitzur Tel Aviv.

Randy Owens of Hapoel Holon, trying to take up the slack caused by Mike Carter's illness, pumped in 41 points for his team, but it was all in vain as Upper Galilee had more scoring balance and won the contest, 105-90. Steve Schlaeter and David Ross, with 24 and 22 points respectively, were high scorers for Hapoel Ramat Gan in their easy 106-58 victory over out-classed Maccabi Rishon LeZion.

Two other State Cup mismatches saw Daryl Robinson with 25 points lead Betar Tel Aviv over Elitzur Netanya, 101-83, and Bill Miller's 25 points paced Afeka as they whipped Degania, 93-68.

Moment of truth

THERE IS a large measure of sardonic irony in the fact that the two main opponents to last Thursday's meeting in Cairo between Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and PLO chief Yasser Arafat are the Israeli government and the more extreme PLO factions. It were as if Jerusalem was trying to prove that it was supporting the vicious circle of rejectionism which has been holding up the peace process for over four years now.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir went as far as terming the Mubarak-Arafat meeting a "severe blow to the peace process," while official Israeli spokesmen referred to it as a violation of the Egypt-Israel Peace Treaty. What is behind these statements is the fear in official Jerusalem that a militarily defeated Arafat may opt for a political solution. Such a move could pave the way for a revival of President Reagan's peace plan of last year by giving approval to King Hussein's joining the peace process as a negotiator on behalf of or together with a number of Palestinian representatives.

That such a development was in the cards should have been obvious to Israel's policymakers ever since Arafat's loyalists were coming under increasing military pressure by the Syrian-supported PLO rebels who are led by Abu Musa. This interecine PLO war resulted in Arafat's dismal exodus from Tripoli last week, somehow turned into a political victory for the beleaguered PLO chief by Israel's half-baked political and military opposition to the exit of the Arafat loyalists from Lebanon.

There are several ways one could look at Arafat's meeting with the Egyptian leadership, at peace with Israel, two years after he danced in the streets of Beirut upon receiving the news of President Sadat's assassination. Going to Canossa by the PLO chief seems to be a far more appropriate description of the Mubarak-Arafat meeting than terming it a "severe blow to peace."

According to official reports from Cairo, President Mubarak did not waver in his attitude towards the peace process and in fact urged Arafat to resume his dialogue with King Hussein with the aim of reviving the Reagan Plan. It would mean resuming negotiations where they were left off last April when Arafat had to give in to the more extreme PLO factions and rescind the formula he had agreed to with Hussein earlier on. The difference being now that Arafat no longer owes any allegiance to his more extremist partners in the PLO who were doing everything in their power to bring about his downfall.

What Arafat's exodus from Beirut last year failed to bring about may now happen as a result of his exodus from Tripoli, brought on by his own people. Being the shrewd political survivor that he is, Arafat must have taken into account that his possible opting for a political struggle, in conjunction with Egypt and Jordan, would in all likelihood cause an open rift within the PLO. That such a rift may also drive a wedge between Arafat and some of his loyal supporters until now, including his deputy in his mainstream Fatah group Abu Iyad, is probably a price Arafat would be prepared to pay now in his despair. One can assume that the popular support Arafat still enjoys among the Palestinians in the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip encouraged him in his risky move to meet President Mubarak in Cairo. Arafat must have been aware of the fact that the overwhelming majority of the West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians are anxious for the negotiating process to be resumed and regret now openly that they failed to support Sadat's peace initiative six years ago. If, as a result, the PLO will have to split it will be a moment of truth for the Palestinians whose fate is directly concerned by the present deadlock.

But what happened in Cairo last Thursday, with the full blessing of Washington, certainly also means a moment of truth for Israel. The U.S. has consistently stressed its determination to revive the Reagan Plan and has made that point clear to Mr. Shamir and to Defence Minister Moshe Arens during their visit to Washington last month. Negotiations with King Hussein, together with a representative delegation of Palestinians, are clearly foreseen in the Camp David agreements of September 1978.

To claim that the Reagan Plan, which seeks to encourage such negotiations, violates these agreements, as official Israeli spokesmen assert, will not change this fact and make an unpleasant reality simply go away. For there cannot be any peace agreement which will not provide a solution for the Palestinian problem. The sooner Jerusalem will recognize this fact and prepare for such a contingency, the better.

LOOKING AT the reality of the Middle East, one cannot convincingly assert that the Palestinian problem is the root cause of the Middle East dilemma. Such a simplification disregards the existing facts and serves neither the Palestinian case nor the cause of peace.

Assuming the Palestinian problem had found a satisfactory solution — of course not as Arafat and the PLO aspire, for the dissolution of Israel — would then the Middle East be an island of tranquillity? Would the Soviets withdraw from Afghanistan? Would Iran and Iraq end their war? Would Gaddafi become a pious apostle of peace? Would Syria and Iraq, both anti-Israel in the extreme, embrace the Jewish state in brotherly love? Would South Yemen cease to be a Soviet bridgehead and Syria an advanced Soviet military staging area? Would the Gulf states be secure from Khomeini's ambitions? Would the conflict between Morocco and the Polisarios vanish like a desert mirage?

Not at all. We would do much better to look at existing problems everywhere in their right dimension, in their factual context and with an undistorted perspective.

Of course, the plight of the Palestinians is a grave and painful problem, not only for them but for Israel as well. The breaking of the decades-old deadlock of the Israeli-Palestinian issues is as vital for Israel, if it wants to remain true to its Jewish vocation, its spiritual identity and democratic tradition, as it is essential for the Palestinians to safeguard their national, cultural and religious substance. Any solution must, therefore, try to strike a safe balance between the Palestinian claim to self-determination and Israel's inalienable right to self-preservation.

A new start must be made now to arrive at an Israeli-Jordanian-Palestinian settlement. The Camp David Accords provide a solid basis for such negotiations. In this agreement, Israel committed itself "to implement in full Resolution 242 in all its parts and provisions; to recognize the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people; to support the establishment of a self-governing authority for the West Bank and Gaza: to participate with Jordanian forces to assure the security of the borders; and to determine by the end of a transitional period of five years the final status of the territories in negotiations conducted among Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the elected representatives of the West Bank and Gaza; and finally to conclude a peace treaty with Jordan."

ARE THERE any examples in diplomatic history in which a state subjected to more than 30 years of warfare, from which it emerged victorious, accepted voluntarily — in advance of negotiations — such a wide range of obligations?

It is not the lack of preliminary commitments that prevents the opening of the negotiations, but the absence of a Jordanian decision to enter them. This, then, is King Hussein's choice. Neither Arafat nor King Fahd, nor President Reagan can make it for him, but there are strong influences in Israel which are willing to facilitate it.

Opinion in Israel is split on the nature of a solution for the outstanding problems with Jordan, but the country is united in its unconditional readiness to enter into negotiations with King Hussein and his representatives.

At the negotiating table, Israel will try to prove that it does not excel only in the craft of war, but also in the art of peace. Accordingly, the three signatories of the Camp David agreement — Egypt, Israel and the United States — should convene a round-table conference, to be attended by the representatives of the states and parties nominated in the accord — Egypt, Israel, the U.S., Jordan and the Palestinian inhabitants of the administered territories.

This conference should determine the division of functions between the various existing authorities and those to be established; the security arrangements for the maintenance of internal safety and the protection of Israel against external threats. It should consider the initiation of measures of self-rule which would enable the Palestinians to handle their own affairs without endangering the security of Israel and pre-empting the decision on the final status of the territories.

In other words, the participants at the conference should endeavour to reach an agreement on the furnishing of the waiting room and make it as comfortable and as safe as possible, until the living room is ready for occupancy, which, in any event, is not contemplated to take place before the termination of the five-year transitional period.

IT IS OBVIOUS that the more stability prevails in the area, the easier it will be to find a peaceful accommodation for the presently irreconcilable aspirations. The way the parties conduct and arrange themselves during the five-year transition will not only affect their immediate human and political condition, but also their fortunes in the future.

The blueprint for a settlement must accommodate the claims, rights and needs of the three principal parties: the Israelis, the Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza, and the Jordanians. Consequently the solution should be sought on a trilateral basis.

Israel and Jordan should negotiate the conclusion of a peace treaty. Both countries have a long-uncontested international border in the south and the north, dating back to the separation of the Transjordan from Palestine. This border needs contractual recognition by both sides.

The political status of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and their geographic demarcation lines must be determined.

The solution for the City of Jerusalem should reconcile its status as the capital of Israel with the religious interests of Christianity and Islam and the well-being of the Arab minority living in the town.

The establishment of a contractual framework for a trilateral association might be useful for the accommodation of the interwoven and not necessarily conflicting interests and aspirations.

Something on the lines of the Benelux Treaty might be a suitable instrumentality for this purpose. Jordan, the West Bank and Gaza would join in a confederation, with a wide measure of autonomy granted to the West Bank Palestinians. The government of the confederation would be in charge of foreign affairs and defence.

The authorities of the Autonomous Palestinian Region would administer its internal affairs. It would be bound by a treaty between Israel and the Jordanian-Palestinian Confederation, to allow freedom of movement between the Palestine region and Israel, and to abide by security arrangements, such as demilitarization and the presence of Israel defence positions for a given period.

The autonomous region and Israel would establish a number of joint bodies to supervise the use of water resources, safeguard Jewish settlements, protect the social rights of Palestinians working in Israel, regulate the freedom of movement between the Palestinian region and the State of Israel and coordinate economic activities of mutual interest.

Israel would grant to the Jordanian part of the confederation freedom of access to a free port on the Mediterranean coast and favour the establishment of a joint port authority for Eilat and Akaba.

If this constitutional arrangement proves workable and durable, it might become the nucleus of a confederation between the three components and, perhaps, develop into a Middle East Community of States, not much different from the European example.

THERE REMAINS the question of Jerusalem, perhaps the most difficult issue of all.

Historically, Jerusalem has never been the capital of any other state, but a Jewish state. It has always been a united city until it became divided for 19 years as a result of the Jordanian occupation.

The solution of the Jerusalem problem might be possible only at the end of the peace process. It should, therefore, be deferred to the end of the negotiations in order not to complicate their early stages.

In the framework of an Israeli-Jordan-Palestinian solution emulating the Benelux model, Jerusalem could play a similar role to that of Brussels in the Benelux association and the European Community.

It may become the seat of the common institutions of the association, remaining a unified city and the capital of Israel.

A tripartite religious give and take authority, composed of the holy, renowned and respectable personalities, could be established, with the aim of safeguarding the rights of all religions, the freedom of worship and access to the holy places, and promoting cooperation and mutual respect between the various communities.

The municipal organization of the City of Jerusalem should provide a wide measure of self-administration for the various communities, based on the borough system, and maximum coordination between the boroughs and the central municipality of Greater Jerusalem.

In short, the plan should be based on the unity of the city, on a maximum of municipal self-administration, on the presence of institutions of Arab-Israeli cooperation, on the preservation of its unique character as a unifying spiritual centre of the three great religions, and on the unalienable fact that Jerusalem is the indivisible capital of the State of Israel.

If these three levels — the governmental, municipal and spiritual — can be brought into harmonious interaction together with the tripartite Jordanian-Palestinian-Israeli association, then Jerusalem and the Holy Land may again inspire disoriented humanity as a centre of spiritual renewal, true to the meaning of its name: City of Peace.

READERS' LETTERS

JUSTICE IN THE WEST BANK

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — As a realistic Zionist and not a chauvinist bent on ultra-nationalistic aggrandisement of the kind that devastated Europe, I am opposed to the brutal colonization and the de facto annexation of the West Bank. And since the tone of Yediyeh Atlas' article ("Enforcing the Law," The Jerusalem Post, December 8) is in rabid support of this policy, I feel obliged to expose it to the white light of the surgery.

The writer states that the Jewish settlers seek justice and demand that existing laws be applied objectively. But justice, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder. For Mr. Atlas, justice as meted out to the West Bank Arabs, is not nearly harsh and vicious enough.

As far as I am concerned, Arab offenders and suspects are swiftly rounded up and vigorously interrogated; curfew is imposed; and as often as not innocent third parties are made to suffer cruelly. The military authorities have a very creditable arrest-record of Arab offenders but a very poor one when it comes to offences committed by Jews, as the Karp report has demonstrated.

"REHABILITATION" PLAN

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — So Mordechai Ben Porat is citing the resettlement of refugees in Gaza camps as proof of the feasibility of his rehabilitation plan (The Jerusalem Post, December 13).

What is not mentioned in this "success story" are the circumstances in which the refugees left the camps. Many thousands fell victim to security operations, such as the bulldozing of security roads, and for the rest, forbidden by military order from improving their homes, there was no choice but to escape increasingly impossible living conditions.

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I wonder what kind of people constitute the committee responsible for deciding subjects for our postage stamp designs?

We are issuing a new series of stamps which includes illustrations of the Kfir aircraft, the Reshet missile boat, and the Merkava tank.

We know that in order to survive we have to be strong. We know that we must be seen to be strong. But is this

Mr. Atlas complains "We are admonished not to take the law into our own hands, yet someone took the law into his own hands when he savagely attacked Yosef Stern with an axe." Whereas I see Yosef Stern's attacker in the Nablus market as a denuded law-breaker, he sees him as someone taking the law into his own hands — equating him perhaps with those who attempted to kill the West Bank mayors?

Towards the end of his article Mr. Atlas states "This struggle for public safety is to make the government until the hands of the official security services on the spot..." These words have an ominous ring. They are reminiscent of the words of the ecstatic followers of the Greek colonels, European dictators and imperial colonialists whose greed for power and riches eventually buried them in the ashens of history.

Mr. Atlas, no less a patriot than those mentioned above, is not seeking justice in the West Bank. He is inclining to higher levels of violence, if not official, then unofficial.

BEN HOPE
Jerusalem.

The other assertion, that the resettlement plan will be non-coercive, not only ignores the considerable pressure which has already been applied to make refugees leave the camps, but it also contradicts the sentiments of every camp inhabitant in Gaza that I have met.

For them, a voluntary move from the refugee camps will only be contemplated if it is within the wider framework of a comprehensive Middle East peace settlement.

TRAFFIC LIGHTS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I am afraid that the article in The Jerusalem Post on November 29th, concerning our experiment "Traffic Experiment: Blinking Red Lights for Haifa Drivers," misinformed your readers. There is a tendency for drivers to ignore the stop and slow signs during the blinking yellow phase. (These signs appear on the secondary road, i.e., for conceding priority), and not, as pointed out in the article, to ignore yellow blinking lights — this has no meaning. We do not know whether this tendency is growing or not. No study has yet shown that drivers who are accustomed to "ignoring the yellow blinkers soon ignore the traffic light altogether."

VOLUNTARY SERVICE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I was delighted to read the story about Sherut La'am (December 9).

The Sherut La'am volunteers have been a boon to the city of Safed, helping supplement our vital services of special education, social work, business development, public relations, and immigrant absorption.

Volunteers wishing to come to Safed should contact Gary Coleman (Tel: 067-30448).

The Jerusalem Post is to be commended for giving publicity to a genuine humanitarian effort to help Israel.

ABUSING AUDIENCES

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I recently complained to an employee of the Mitchell cinema in Jerusalem about the noise level and unbelievable loudness of the advertisements broadcast. I was told that it was impossible to reduce the volume because the advertisers insist on it.

The advertisers should realise that this insulting behaviour towards the audience who pay to see a film is counter-productive and leads to the rejection of that product.

Incidentally one of the advertisements shown was to encourage the public to go to the cinema. The message however, was only heard by the approximately 50 people who remained in their seats. Even such a number will dwindle if cinema owners and advertisers continue to abuse their audiences.

WAR AND PEACE ON MICROFILM

Research and study is easier with professional resources at your fingertips. For the student, researcher, journalist, writer, or diplomat who seeks the primary source of information on war and peace in the Middle East, the microfilmed pages of The Jerusalem Post are the answer.

The microfilm can be ordered by year or, newly available, complete collections of the conflict between Israel and the Arab States, divided into seven periods:

- * THE WAR OF INDEPENDENCE, Nov. 1, 1947 — July 31, 1949
- * THE SINAI CAMPAIGN, Oct. 1, 1956 — March 31, 1957
- * THE SIX-DAY WAR, April 1, 1967 — June 30, 1967
- * THE WAR OF ATTRITION, Oct. 1, 1967 — Aug. 31, 1970
- * THE YOM KIPPUR WAR, Oct. 1, 1973 — May 31, 1974
- * INTERVENTION IN LEBANON, March 1, 1978 — June 30, 1978
- * THE EGYPT-ISRAEL PEACE TREATY, Nov. 1, 1977 — March 31, 1979

Each period is available separately or as a collection.

IT HAS always been difficult for some dispassionate observers to accept that the concrete expanse of Tel Aviv's Kikar Malchay Yisrael is as elastic as Gertie's garters. In July last year, it was reputed to have held 200,000 Likud demonstrators — the equivalent of 500 people milling around in an ordinary 100 sq. m. flat. By September, 400,000 Alignment and Peace Now demonstrators were reported to have squeezed in to protest against the Beirut massacres.

Now, a low-flying British pilot has put us in the picture. Brian Bateson was charged at Pateley Bridge magistrates court with infringing civil aviation laws by flying over an anti-nuclear demonstration in Yorkshire. It is an offence to fly near an open assembly of more than 1,000 people and CND organizers claimed that over 4,000 had turned out. The charge against Bateson was dismissed when he produced aerial photographs taken by his passenger which showed that only 600 people had attended the rally. A.B.

IF YOU WANT to write a Postscript, says a correspondent up north, do it at once.

Recently, he says, it occurred to him that the bus fare from Haifa to Tel Aviv was now precisely 1,000 times as much as it was when he came to Israel in 1958.

He decided to write to Postscripts about it, but before he set pen to paper, the fare had gone up again. E.G.

MEMBERS of the Netorei Karta sect reportedly objected to the portrait of Maimonides on the new 151,000 note because they couldn't shame the great sage by bringing the bills with them into the bathroom, and because MK Avraham Shapira, of Agudat Yisrael, signed the note as chairman of the Bank of Israel advisory committee. But others are now complaining that the visage, a traditional picture of the Rambam, is not him at all. The head lacks sidecurls, and the beard is short. They say that a Spanish stamp dedicated to Maimonides, in which he has payor and a long white beard, is more accurate. J.S.I.

ARMAND HAMMER of the Occidental Petroleum Company has been urged by activists concerned about Soviet Jews to act on their behalf.

In an open letter to Hammer, the Colorado Committee of Concern for Soviet Jewry note that Hammer has "had the ear of every Soviet leader from Lenin to Andropov." His financial connections with Russia this company is engaged in a $20 million business deal with the Soviet Union should be used to pressure for free Jewish emigration and an end to official harassment of the Jews there, said the committee.

"Since you are an American and most recently have been depicted as a human-rights activist, we have the right to expect you to use your influence with Mr. Andropov now toward achieving these humanitarian goals." ISI
